Markham Hotels - The key differences between conventional hotels and a resort is the type of amenities and activities that are provided on-site in addition to the services they provide. Resorts for instance, is more often spread out over more land compared to a conventional hotel would be. There are normally a lot more activities offered to the guests due to the extra space. As well, resorts generally provide more on and off-site freebies and guest discounts. Even though a resort and hotel seem to be the same, there are particular reasons why guest choose to stay at one instead of the other.

Some resorts have such a substantial amount of property that they have the extra space available for such extreme features like a golf course. The resorts often have more rooms available for the customers too. Usually the property of a resort is near or on some kind of natural landscape, such as an oceanfront resort. Normally, hotels have just an adequate amount of land for the building and the parking lot. Most hotels are located on a main thoroughfare also, so that it is very easy for traveling patrons to pull in and find lodging. Furthermore, with hotels being centrally located, hotel customers to have access to all of the activities within the area.

The types of amenities which every resort or hotel may differ widely since it is common for a hotel to support a pool or a fitness center. If there are any eating establishments at all, a hotel could have a restaurant or small kitchen available, while a resort normally has approximately 2 restaurants and lounges and room service. Such activities as a spa, a computer area, tennis and golf, dancing and live music are among the popular activities which occur on a resort.

One other major difference between the two kinds of hospitality is the amount of discounts which they may offer. Hotels will normally offer free Wi-Fi access, complimentary breakfasts and a free newspaper. Resorts however, offer all of that and normally a lot more. Often, resorts offer free shuttle service to and from the airport. Resorts normally have discounts available for eateries off and on the premises and discounted tickets to tourist attractions close by.

Resorts are normally at a vacation spot and not geared towards business travelers. Many who come to stay at a resort, do so for all the extras that the resort might provide. These people are quite often looking for a place to escape, to relax and to get away from their busy lifestyles. Hotels are really terrific places to offer rest for their customers, but people who stay within a hotel are normally just there for business meetings or business conferences.
