5 Star Hotels In Markham - A hotel doorman is responsible for guarding the entry to the doors. They can work at nightclubs, hotels, apartment buildings or large business buildings. A different term "doorkeeper" is related to doorman and refers to the person responsible for guarding the door and allowing or denying entrance to people who would like access to a building. Until the post was abolished during 1995, the United States House of Representatives had an official doorkeeper on the grounds.

Many individuals who reside in big apartments enjoy having a bit of additional security offered by the doorman. Even though the doorman doesn't necessarily act the same as a security guard, he usually does offer added building safety. A good doorman gets to know and recognize all the people within the apartment and normally those friends and relatives who frequently visit them. Being alert and recognizing people who reside on the premises allows the doorman to be able to be aware of anyone entering the building who must not be there.

When the doorman is in regular employment at an apartment, it is normally customary to offer a seasonal tip. This tip could be done cooperatively or separately, depending on how small or large the building is. It is also customary for friends and relatives to offer a one or two dollar tip also.

On the contrary, the doorman responsible for protecting a business does not necessarily need a tip. He is usually the initial contact with people going in a building and is able to provide information regarding where that person must go. In many places, the doorman has been replaced by a concierge, a help desk or security desk personnel near the entrance of the building. In some businesses, patrons might just be permitted entry to some parts of the building if they really need to be there, like an appointment for example. These staff help to keep the building safer by turning away those who don't have a legitimate reason to be within a building.

Often, the hotel doorman also serves as a porter. They can assist people from their vehicles to the reception desk and likewise bring their baggage to rooms. In various cases, the hotel doorman just opens the hotel door and ushers people inside. The word doorman is usually the same with usher in the movie theatres. An usher is an individual who checks theatre tickets at the door in order to make certain the customer has really bought a ticket to see the show and guides people to their seats. Ushers may perform additional responsibilities like asking unruly customers to quiet down or leave the theatre, ensure no one is illegally recording films and keeping the theatres always tidy.
